The diagram shows a hierarchical tree structure. It starts with a root node (red) on the left. This root has two children: a red node and a blue node. The red node has two children: a red node and a blue node. The blue node has two children: a red node and a blue node. This pattern continues, with each red node having two children (one red, one blue) and each blue node having two children (one red, one blue). The tree structure is shown as a series of horizontal bars connected by vertical lines, with the final node on the right being a grey bar.

The diagram shows a hierarchical tree structure. It begins with a single red node at the top left. This node branches into two blue nodes. Each blue node then branches into two red nodes, and each red node branches into two blue nodes, creating a zig-zag pattern of alternating colors. The tree continues to branch down and to the right, eventually leading to a single gray node at the bottom right. The nodes are represented by colored rectangles, and the branching is indicated by black lines.
